

Short Story Submissions – due Friday, April 27

For this assignment, you will submit your short story to at least two different lit journals, magazines, or contests!

First, research markets for your story. Don't pay to submit and don't submit to vanity sites – there must be an editor who accepts or rejects submissions. See the links on Mr. Cantwell's "CW – Documents" page for more ideas. A good place to start there is the "Poets & Writers" link (you can also Google "poets and writers literary database.") Select "Fiction" from the genre dropdown button and "Flash fiction" from the subgenre dropdown button. You can follow the links to different journals' websites to see if they are currently accepting submissions and what their guidelines are. Standard font for journal submissions is 12 pt. Times, double-spaced.

Many journals require you to submit through something called "Submittable." This is legit; most authors use it. It is free to create a Submittable account.

You must make your two submissions and share proof of submitting with me by Friday, April 27. If you are submitting via email, please "bcc" the email to me at cantwell@4j.lane.edu or just also "share" it with me through google docs. If you submit via Submittable or another submission manager, you can do one of the following: print your submission record, show me your submission record, or take a screenshot of your submission record and e-mail it to me at the address above.

In most cases, you will need a cover letter. This might be the body of the e-mail, in the "add a note" box in google docs, or a message in a window provided in Submittable. Keep it short and simple. These cover letters are typically two paragraphs. Include the title and word count in the first paragraph. In the second paragraph, working authors are able to list previous publications or writing accomplishments, which you may not have. Feel free to include anything that you feel gives your writing legitimacy, but also try not to come off as an amateur. It is fine to just have the first paragraph. Have me or someone else read this letter, and then edit/revise it. Here is the cover letter I used for a recent acceptance:

Dear Editors,

I am submitting my short story, "Runner" (5,700 words), for your consideration in The Massachusetts Review. I hope you find it a good fit for your journal.

I hold an MFA from the Rainier Writing Workshop at Pacific Lutheran University. My fiction has appeared or is forthcoming in Whitefish Review, Newfound, Cirque, Wisconsin Review, Weber-The Contemporary West, New Ohio Review, Flyway, and American Literary Review.

Sincerely,
Tom Cantwell

Good luck! Let me know if you have any questions throughout the process, and definitely let me know if your story is accepted!
